Becoming an Inclusive Leader: Breaking Biases to Live and Lead with Openness, Understanding and Inclusion

How much more could you and your teams achieve without the burden of internal bias? Guided by business transformation guru Torin Perez, leaders learn not only to recognize the biases – personal and business-related – that may be undermining their teams, their outcomes and their own leadership, but also how to set those biases aside in the name of growth.

As Perez has proven in his work across industries and cultures, removing the negative drag of bias elevates people and frees them to perform to their potential. In a highly engaging and interactive forum, the author of Who Am I to Lead? The World Is Waiting for You details the mindset shifts and actions that go into becoming a leader who makes a positive difference – in peoples' lives and careers and to the organization's bottom line. Through storytelling and methods rooted in both psychology and practical business, Perez shows leaders what it takes to inspire others and transform cultures through inclusiveness and a deeper understanding of, and appreciation for, the people around them.

Perez's pioneering work in the field of diversity and inclusion is inspired by his mentor, Frances Hesselbein, the former CEO of the Girl Scouts of the USA. He was a member of the inaugural class of the TED Residency, an incubator for breakthrough ideas. He is a One Young World Ambassador, StartingBloc Fellow, Posse Scholar, and 2017 nominee for the Rosoff Award as a leading 20-something voice for diversity and inclusion.
